

Telemarketers complain that keeping track of the states' differing rules on "do not call" rules is burdensome. We can suggest two solutions: Either (1) check to see what state you're calling, or (2) observe the rules of the most stringent. Is this unreasonable? And we wonder: don't Republicans believe in states' rights anymore?